THE BELGIAN MARRIAGE. On the 10th last, the marriage of the Duke of Brabeat, the heir to the crown of Belgium, with an Austrian Arch Duchess, was celebrated at Vienna, and San' day, Monday and Tuesday of the present week, were up pointed for the wedding festivities at Brussels. To this event a good deal of political importance is attributed by the journalists and statesmen of Europe, who supbe strengthened by the accession of Belgium on the ope hand, while on the other Belgium gales a new and powerful support from the Holy Alliance. No doubt there is some foundation for these speculations. But for the advent of Napoleon, the haughty and threatening tone he has maintained toward Beigrum, and the invessed passibility of a continental war, so long as France remains practice in her chedience to his ambition, it is not probable that Kug Leopold would have succeeded in allying his family with any of the shadute Course. Up to the French coup d'état be hal steadly experienced anything but cordial treatment at Berlin, St. Petersburgh and Vienna, where he was ever regarded as rather an intruder in the list of Monarchy. The French Empire, however, changed the disposition of those Courts, and like a cool and skillful manager, as he is, Leopold facled not to take advantage of the change, to bring about this union of his house with that of Hapsburg. Still we opine that the transaction can have little el feet in controlling the destiny of Belgium or of Earoje, and we incline to see in it rather a gratification to the self-love of a Cobourg, than a solid guaranty of the interests even of the King of Belgium. The fact is that in these days the alliances of royal bouseholds do not exercise any controlling influence in European politics. The time for such things is gone by Ecopold himself is a striking evidence of this. He became King of Belgium in spite of the most intimate family relations which, had they possessed any effective force, should have secured to the house of Orange-Nassau the centinued possession of that country. At the time of the Belgian revolution, in 1830, William, King of the Netherlands was married to a sister of the late King of Prussia; his son, the Prince of Orange, the beir to the throne, was the brother-in-law of the Emperor Nicholas : his second son, Prince Frederic of the Netherlands was the brother-in-law of the present

King of Prussia; his daughter was then the wife of Prince Frederic, the second brother of the same King (but she has since been divorced); in spite of all these formidable alliances the house of Orange was deprived of Belgium and Leopold of Coburg has been for twenty odd years its monarch.

The Coburgs, as German princes, belong hardly to the second rank in the ari tecratic scale. For digitaries of this sort, the house of Huerburg is something grand and lefty which their ambition would never presume to tirosch, notwithstanding the ecormous self-conceit with which the Coburgs are as well or better furnished than any of their peers. It will be a great thing for Leo. ped to record in the family archives that he has compassed a marriage with the Hapeburgs, a distinction never before even so much dreamed of by Coburgs, who have often been in the service of the house of Austria and have intermerried with Austrian subjects, as in the case of the Colurg Cobsez family, a daughter of which married the Due de Nemours As a fact strikingly illustrative of the position held by the Coburgs in the ceremonial of the German Courts, we may mention the fact that at the visit or Queen Victoris and Prince Athert to the King of were in session in Albuny on Monday. We understand Prussia at Boon, on occasion of the erection of a monuncut to Beethoven, several German princes and as Austrian Arch-Duke were also present. A grand dinner was given by the King of Prussis to this august company, when the king gave his arm to the British sovereign, Walle her Majesty of Prussia Was escorted by the Ausscription of a magnificent private coach, drawn by trian Arch Duke, leaving the "Queen's Consort" to follow after. At this piece of German etiquette, Madame liveries. From his description of it, one might imagine. Victoria was furious, and remained sulky through the

This invitanon of the Sovereign to a sham fight, a Sovereign whose chlefride is "Defender of the Faith"-a fall h which says blossed are the prace makers, and that those who live by the sword shall die by the sword, is like that extended to a deputation of the Societs of Potends from England, who not long since received a special card to be present at a mile of battle of some thirty thousand stroops on the Champs Eigedes. It is bardly necessary o add that the Priends were consistent, and immeditely quitted the French capital for their homes.

The account of the naval sham-fight off Spinhead ells us that "as the wind slowly rolled the clouds to keward of the flotills, bringing into view boat after boat and the bulls of the steamers the rouga'mil was one watch no language can convey, for it was instiget with motion teeming with energetic life. The boars were returning to their respective ships, from which the signal of recoil had been helesaid, or with ears aloft were lying to off the late senemy; on the white bench at Southern, as far as the eye could reach, thousands of people were gathered, in full enmy and every place, in fact, from which a view of Spithead could be had, were black with a swarm of human ings. On the other side, with the aid of a glass, it could be perceived that the whole population had poured down to the above of the late of Wight and the pler at Ryde and the hills toward the smalle were overed with men, wemen and children. Everything that could float and move by sail or our-and wonderful it was to see occasionally what feats, contrary to all appearances, were performed in this way-collected from all parts of the neighboring shores, was on the waters firting about, so as to shut out the face of the waves, beneath a shifting veil of rope and wood and cauras. The Royal Yacht, beset with them like a queen bee by its loving subjects, floated tranquilly, the center of incomerable lorguettes and prying eyes. At intervals some very dirty and very loyal steamer came waddling along close to the Victoria and Albert, and discharged a voiley of hearty cheers from its living carge as the well-known form of their Sovereign was seen on the deck of her floating palace; and gentlemanly yachts veiled their topsails as they came near. and ungentlemanly ones stood too close in and became came hustling through them, each with a long dark tra'l in the air behind it, and, in the center of the picture. Admiral Fanshawe's squadron, with every stitch of canvas that could be set, except studdingsails, bore down ma'estically in line between the port and starboard divisions of its late assailants, towering above the pigmy craft a the pillars of some rained Fastern temple over the Arab tents at their base. We innocently fancied that the most impressive sight of the Peace Congress kind was the inauguration of the London Crystal I alace, barring the military orders of the magnates on the platform: but here is the old story -the preservation of peace by means of multiplying the men and missiles of war. But do they keep the peace? No. The peace is kept with France by some sixty thousand English who live in Paris and are indispensable o French shop keepers and the national budget; by the purchase of French objects of luxury and use, and the pay for them in English iron and cotton-yarn. The peace is kept with this country because England needs haif our cotton crop, and besides that we are too strong in our resources of defence-when necessary, extemporising commissariat and army and navy, with the celerity which only belongs to the individualism of democratic freemen. So long as England finds security in flects, so long will the ricultural laborer live from hand to mouth: so long will the Celt migrate at the rate of two hundred thousand a year and the Song of the Shirt be the national lyric. The man who constantly carries arms will certainly find use for them: and the peace which is maintained near who exemisely central the country and detest the tion of extended empire-and war must ever continue according to The Times while Britain holds sway in Indin-is no peace. DOCTORS DISAGREEING.

The State Register glows with eathusiasm at the prospects now opening before what it calls the Whig party on this State. At the same time it ladles out a lot of good advice to teach this great party how to make sure of the victory at the approaching election. Hearken to its words of wisdom and encouragement:

words of wisdom and encouragement:

"The propect before the Wing party now is most cheering. With a divided opposition an opposition compared of a party warring with unexampled betterness against itself, the Wrig party has the power of commanding one see. If his true to itself, its triumph is begond a persitive mrs. But to such a triumph harm no is essential. The past has its admonstrons by which the Whigs should not fail to profit. The causes of dissension, now ever, medic increasity ro longer be considered as in cast ence. The past should be forgotten, and the Whig party be seen as in the days of oid, marching in solid community victory.

On the other hand. The Express, a journal of the than 200,0 0, chiefly Roman Catholics, in a year, our same stripe as that which jubilistes in the strain above quoted, is unable to share the buoyant anticipations of its up-river colleague, and sees things through melancholy speciacies. The Express at last comes to the dreadful conviction that the Whig party has been really can read this extract without a pane of sympathy:

But there is not much ise in devoting the warm weather to a controversy as hard to settle us that growing out of the memorable mestion: "Who killed Cock Robin!" Enough that each has taken place, that the old platforms are smashed up, and that just now, to use the language of The Egpress, there are " in this great State four powerful partica " of which no two can be combined on any commen ground of political action.

To er these circumstances why not les politics go for a season, while all the sober people of all these four parties combine to enact and enforce the Maine Law? After that politics might be resumed, if it should be necessary, with a hope of morality, and harmony, and beceffe to the State, which is impossible to the present sge of grog shops and drunkenness. What says The

Having repeatedly stated the facts with regard to the appointment of Mr Belmout, as representative of this country at the Hagne, without a contradiction from any sufferitative source, we have not thought it necessary to expose the much more in-ignificant little drama layed off here last week in the form of an invitation to a public disner which Mr. Beimont duly declared. The Richmond Enquirer, however, improves the opportunity to induige in the following exaction :

"The opposition size and sor, to the appointment of the Delinear grows out of the loberout projection in the Why twity against the cisions of our adopted character the rights and privilegas or American extensis. In this they be may the worst passions of Nativism." The Enquirer very well knows that the opposition to this appointment is not confined to the members of the former Whig party, and that not a word has ever been said against Mr. B. on the grounds here alleged. Democrats as well as Whige condemn that appointment, and while all are content that foreign born citizens should be intrusted with public duties for which they are qualified, it is felt to be a bitter disgrace that high offices should be bestowed on those whose only claim to them is that they have paid largely to carry an election. It is not surprising, however, that The Enquirer should have no sympathy with a sentiment so decent and

United States vs. Causala.

This great match that has caused so much existement commenced y steeday on the St. George's Cricket Ground, ited House, Plansem, and drew together a large compourse of the lovers of this manly game, there being some the electators present. The day, though threatening raio, was if a Uncket could desire, and both United States and sanaca men in their Cricketing cress coked well, in fact. she sides were well matched, the game well contested, the bowling and fielding on both sides equally good, and the result of the game, whichever way it may turn, must give satisfaction. Among the Canadian visitors on the ground, independent of the Cricketers, we noticed Hon. Justice Deaper Sir Low. Poore, Mesare Hamilton Gillersleeve, C. THE IMPEACHMENT TRIAL

Concessordance of The N. Y. Tribabe.

ALBANY, Westsordey, Aug. 18, 1833.

The examination of Jerome D. Stillsen, an Engineer was cone used this morning. The witness did not appear to know much of anything in connection with the let-things, except what was understood by him to be all fair these, except what was understood by him to be all fair and proper. He never heard any impreser propositions made, entertained or discussed in the Letting Board, though he was present nearly all the while. He explained, however, that there had been a change made in 1-54 in the form of making contracts. Previous to 1849, it appears, there was always a classification of hard parties. The characteristic of the property of the property of the characteristic of the property of the property and quickward. During that year that classification was excluded. In 1851 it was put in scain.

He also testified to the fact that there was always. He also testified to the fact that there was always a horde of Contractors about the room in which the Sections of the Letting Board were held: that whenever the Foard adjourned the members outcome into expensation with these Contractors. But he never heard any conversations between them about the lettings; didn't know what they were a king about.

Col. Abel, of Livingston was then called. The Colone as peared an unwilling winess, and doclined to answer who composed the "A Co " of the Richardson A Co, whose claims to a contract he was advocating. He are

He had put on what was called the "Chatfield since" a large amount of the work for the Compuny he was working for, but subsequently acquiesced in a smaller allotment, and agreed to an allo acquiesced in a smaller allotiment, and agrees to an allotinent to Law. He urged upon members of the Board the political claims of his friends. He was asked if he urged the claims of others, and replied that he did. He was then asked if he urged their positical claims, and the Counsel for the respondent objected to the question. An argument eased. It was objected that it was not counselent to prove anything of this character unless it could be shown that he urged there claims upon the respondent. It was maintained that it could be shown that this influence was used upon the Board, and that the respondent was implicated, as charged in the articles. the respondent was implicated, as carried in the articles.

After counsel had got through, Senator Cooley asked for a private consultation, and it was granted. The Count then went into private consultation, and remained the

WASHINGTON.

Courspindence of The N. Y. Tribme.

WASHINGTON, Tousday, Aug. 28, 1949

In walking along Pennsylvania av . on one of the hottest days of the season my attention was drawn to a magnificent carriage standing by the shlewalk, between Ninth and Tenth sts. It was certainly, for beauty, rich-North and Tenthers. It was certainly, for beauty, richness, and maiform appropriateness, one of the finest establishments I have seen, reminding one of the spleadid equipages of some of the British nobility, which may be seen of an afternoon in Hyde Park. The horses were fine, large days, covered with a hartess heavily and rich; commented with after. The doors and panels acre filled with heavy plats glass claborately out, and the matocco limings, large cappet, and rich silk inseels and largets, gave it an air of comfort and luxury seldom met with in this practical age. The driver and featman were white, clad in blue livery with glit buttons. Leonid not but puty the poor fellows, of whom one was standing at the door, waiting, as it appeared, for some one who was shopping in the fashionable shops to be found only in this portion of the mecropolis. This turn-out being so in inch superior to anything I had seen in America, made me desirous to hotice it the more pattleniarly, and so nuch experient to notice it the more particularly, and had one desirons to notice it the more particularly, and had one to inquire respecting the owner of so rich as equipage, and halting a moment in the shade of one of the class on the sidewalk. I saw it entered by a middle age of hady in black: the heavy door closed without noise, and the footman, encumbered with his immense and heavy cloth coat, ascended with difficulty to the clerated benys cloth coat, ascended with difficulty to the circular seat with the driver, and the prancing steeds were driven by Pennsylvania av. In answer to my inquity of abytening to some foreigner of distinction. I was informed that the carriage belonged to President Pierce. The driver and attendant were pule focos, thin-looking follows who appeared as it seemed down by their capacions but close-buttoned livery coats, which could not have but here very inconvenient, with the micrograph of the shade, and then most people were call in thisness habiliments, famoug themselves as they promenaded the avenues of Warlington.

The corcular of Gov. the wants of the Department, which is compelled to occupy partiess of other buildings. Here may be seen the first account book of the Post-Office Department, kept like some in Franklin and kept in his own hand-writing. It is a small volume of half an inch in thickness of cap reise of by gone days, and its examination fills the mind with emotions deep and varied.

This department was at the moment in receipt of by piece it was stripped of the boxes in which it had been conveyed to the Camirol, seemed to stimel greatly the attention of the employes of the offices, who with powe in bond, were expellating upon its elegance, and I came us that units with the m in the opinion of its superior inputs over the plain cherry tables and desht which had acfliced for the moderate and antiquated tastes of by piece it was stripped of the because in which it has ore plain and bygene days. I tenroed that the improvements of this nature were not confued alone to the Post Office, but that rouns of many of the clerks were being not only richly formished with office furthers, but were being amply supplied with what contributed to comfort, and that rich softs were becoming quite evenues, so that when the business of the effice was the business.

I noticed in the room of one of the elects of the Interier high-back, damask-covered arm abuses and spring-send softs where, a few months since, nothing was to be seen but plain, came-bostomed scats; and that they were not for ermanent merely. I had ocular demonstration (who was, dorbitess resting from his labors) in the sickling arms of a great chair, with his feet gracefully elevated upon a table, supporting one extended had with a walking click, and surreting his observation to the graceful cut a of smake, as they were generated from an are madic regalia.
